Green and sustainable production

When discussing Green and Sustainable investments and developments in Vietnam, it is important to look at the successful livestock and aquaculture sector. There have been an impressive growth in terms of volume and value of food production from livestock (swine, poultry, dairy) as well as aqua (shrimp, pangasius, locally consumed fish species). With such impressive growth there is often an environmental impact that are considerable. To further modernize the agriculture sector in Vietnam, ensure that it is greener and done so we also have a healthy sector in coming years, it is important that we take a look at greener production, investments linked to greener production and more traceability of our products. This presentation will come with suggestions and discuss how to make a greener and profitable production of livestock and aqua production in Vietnam.

Green farming systems/ best practices aimed at reducing CO2

There is increased focus on CO2 reductions from all production, and this also include agriculture. As an industry we have to focus on green solutions that are reducing our CO2 footprint, and at the same time be innovative enough to make sure it will not impact the profitability of farmers. Also the special attention needed towards small and medium scale farmers, and how we can ensure they are included as they often will have a relatively larger impact on their production due to climate change.
